YOUR CERAMIC SNACK

EGYPT is generally thought to be the birthplace of THE POTTER'S WHEEL.

It was there, around 3000BC that a long shaft was added under the centre of the wheel head (the flat, round, turning surface used for forming wet clay into cylindrical forms). A heavy fly wheel at the base of this shaft was introduced, providing power and momentum for the rotation of the wheel head.

Apart from our recent harnessing of electrical power, the machine has remained largely the same to this day.

FREAKY FACT: The conventional wheel head is horizontal but there are some that are constructed to work at an angle and still others that work upside down!!
